*The National Capital Region's Neighborhood Watch for DoD

Countering terrorism requires your help. Only you know who or what belongs - or doesn't belong in your building, neighborhood, or work center. The simple act of recognizing suspicious behavior and reporting it to authorities could thwart terrorist attacks and save lives. Please help by being alert for and reporting any of the following:

- Surveillance: Someone recording or monitoring activities using cameras (either still or video), note taking, drawing diagrams, annotating on or creating maps, and using binoculars or other vision-enhancing devices. An element of this activity could also include mapping out routes and determining the timing of traffic lights and flow.
- Elicitation: People attempting to get information. These attempts may be made by mail, fax, telephone, e-mail or in person and may seem like totally innocent questions about what you do and where you work.
- Tests of security: Any attempt to measure reaction times and actions by police. A test of security can be disguised as a simple mistake such as a vehicle approaching a security barrier and then turning around or an attempt to circumvent access control procedures in order to assess strengths and weaknesses of police and equipment.
- Acquiring supplies: Purchasing or stealing police and military uniforms, emergency responder type vehicles (such as police cars and ambulances), building passes and other identification media or the equipment to manufacture them.
- Dry run or practice: People or vehicles appear to have been purposely placed in a particular position or area. This is especially true when planning a kidnapping, but it also pertains to bombings.
- Actual deployment of people and assets: People and supplies getting into position to conduct an attack. This is the last chance to alert authorities before the attack occurs.
- Suspicious persons out of place: People who don't seem to belong or fit in the surrounding environment, especially if involved in any of the above listed activities.
